First European Conference on Internationalization of Teacher Education

Challenges and Options towards a better Recognition and Comparability of Qualifications

Today's classrooms are characterized by a mixture of languages, cultures and values. This requires teachers who ideally have knowledge in more than one language. Further, they should possess intercultural competences enabling them to prepare their students for international, transnational and intercultural encounters.

For many young Europeans a united Europe stands for the possibility to frequently change their private or occupational centres of life and thus experience mobility in all its facets.

To support the mobility actions of teacher trainees and teachers from all over the world the EU has published guideline principles. The Directive 2013/55/EU of the European Parliament and of the Council, for instance, facilitates the accreditation of international teaching degrees so that teachers are able to change their labour country.

Nevertheless, only few (prospective) teachers leave their country of origin during or after their training in order to collect experiences as a teacher abroad. One major reason for this can be found in the difficulty of getting achievements from abroad accredited. This refers to both, course achievements and training qualifications, including graduate diplomas.

Discussing possibilities and alternatives of recognition of study programme achievements as well as final qualifications from across Europe in order to increase mobility activities of teachers and teacher trainees is the central aim of this conference.

The conference unites stakeholders from different teacher-training institutions such as universities, training academies and departments of education, as well as experts from exchange services and the European Union in order to deliberate and extend existing accreditation strategies.

Equivalence in Lieu of Uniformity

Uniting without Creating Uniformity – The European Challenges in Teacher Education in the 21st Century by Ursula Uzerli

In the 2007a Conclusions of the Council of the European Union on 'Improving the Quality of Teacher Education' Ministers highlighted the need to insure a high standard of initial teacher education to provide early career support and to engage in continuous professional development that is coordinated, coherent and adequately resourced and to assure high quality.

In Education and Training Work Programmes within the revised Lisbon Strategy the European Commission thus offered a structure to support Member States develop and modernise their education and training policies by the exchange of information, data and good practice offering possibilities for peer learning and peer review. One of the overall aims in these efforts was and is to achieve a high level compatibility as increasing mobility within the Union has become an important aspect of the knowledge society.

The huge differences in teacher education in many Member States were one of the greatest impulses to start the Bologna Process in 1999 as a trust building process within the Higher Education Area. An endeavour for dialogue and cooperation which reaches far beyond Europe was one of the visions. Its fundamental principles and its spirit like free movement of students and staff, tolerance, freedom of research, freedom of expression, student involvement and the co-creation of learning reflect the basic values of the European society.

In 2000 the European Network on Teacher Education Policies (ENTEP) was formally launched after the initiative of the Portuguese Minister of Education, who invited colleagues in the European Member States to establish a network that would help to develop the political dimension of teacher education in Europe. The main intention was to develop opportunities to learn from each other by analysing and comparing policies and connected issues, as well as by sharing good practices. This endeavour was also meant to improve mutual trust in the teaching qualifications awarded by Member States.

The question what actually is a 'European Teacher' has always been high on ENTEP's agenda in the first ten years of the network's conferences and seminars and still is. ENTEP members highlighted, as one of the characteristics of a European teacher, his/ her engagement with the multicultural nature of European society. Furthermore, it is important that he/she knows how to behave in a confident and non-dominant way, works with heterogeneous groups, sees heterogeneity as valuable, and respects any differences.

Through increased globalization, migration and progress in European integration and mobility, cultural pluralism in society has become the norm in many EU member states and teachers are facing significant changes concerning their pupils' cultural and linguistic backgrounds. This increased socio-cultural diversity in our schools and the growing number of pupils with a multilingual background has thus created a great challenge for all teachers, social workers and other experts in the educational sector.

Especially from the perspective of inclusion – politically, socially and educationally – strategic interventions and policies are needed to support or even guarantee equality of opportunity in education and training for all as full members of our societies. And most importantly – teachers must be adequately prepared to teach effectively in such multicultural and multilingual classroom-settings.

Panel Discussion:

Rethinking Bologna – Recognition of University Study Performance and Teaching Diplomas in Europe: Achievements, Actions and Unsolved Cases

When I think about Bologna,...

...I see rippling waves of reform lapping countries across Europe, linking archipelagoes of diverse terrains, through the collaborative building of safe thoroughfares. This requires a common map with agreed landmarks and reference points, and a key role for boundary spanners (stakeholders called to implement policy across contexts - teachers and teacher educators in the first place). Even more, it calls for active commitment to shared priorities (boosting mobility and knowledge exchange) and shared European values (intercultural dialogue and appreciation of diversity).

Dr. Francesca Caena

... I think about a "black and white book" of Europeanisation higher education system in general through EHEA with huge consequences of the Europeanisation processes of Teacher Education...

Prof. Dr. Romita Iucu

... I like the greater freedom for universities and students to shape and organize teacher training programmes with less influence from the ministries of education and research. On the other hand, I fear that Bologna promises more flexibility for students and more polyvalence than it can actually offer in teacher training programmes.

Prof. Dr. Jörg Keßler

... in terms of teacher education, I see a great chance in a combined study model which allows students to receive a teaching diploma at the same time they achieve their Bachelor's or a Master's degree. The combination of a professional teaching diploma and an academic degree gives future teachers the opportunity to not only work as a teacher, but to also qualify for an academic career at a university.

Dr. Madeleine Salzmann

... I most of all appreciate its spirit as a great trust building effort (among the signature states and beyond). In detail I am looking forward to more freedom of choice for students with regard to modules offered and I am hoping for more cooperation among faculties and teacher educators within faculties for joint approaches to crucial content in initial teacher education and adequate recognition...
