Magic, Sorcery, Witchcraft

The 10th international conference of the Association of Interdisciplinary Witchcraft Research addresses questions related to the creation, construction and transmission of so called magical knowledge. Since antiquity, more specifically during the Late Middle Ages and the early modern period, hosts of diverging and heterogeneous bodies (or containers) of knowledge developed concerning magic, sorcery and witchcraft. Stocks of specific knowledge interlinked a wide variety of spaces of communication and practices. In transfer situations stereotypes were articulated, as well as paradigmatic or unique patterns of imagination, of interpretation and of action. These patterns crossed geographical, political, confessional as well as linguistic boundaries. Likewise, orally transmitted knowledge was laid down in written texts or images. Different social milieus with their distinctive bodies of knowledge created spaces of communication and enabled the transmission of ideas between the elite and popular domain. Members of specific networks, including the learned and the religious elite as well as artists and the university faculties of medicine, theology, and law, exchanged, negotiated, constructed and transferred relevant bodies of knowledge (e.g. the Dominicans). In legal courtrooms (e.g. in the Holy Office), scribes, notaries and legal advisers constructed bodies of knowledge concerning magic, sorcery and witchcraft, which in the respective trials seemed to prove their material relevance.

In five interdisciplinary sessions, 22 contributors from eleven European and non-European countries discuss these fascinating complex phenomena related to the origin, construction and modification as well as the practical use of knowledge of magic, sorcery and witchcraft.
